One of my best qualities is that I am a caring person. Many times I will put others before myself. I believe it's important to care about more than just yourself because there are other people living in this world besides you and many don't have the basic necessities to survive. Hunger is a huge problem in America that could easily be fixed if more people cared that there are people dying from hunger. Caring about other people can make a huge impact because we get more people to care then we can make a positive change. If we get major grocery stores to donate more food we can open up more "soup" kitchens in impoverished areas. Many times funding is the issue when feeding those in need, so we start by getting major companies to contribute money or food in general. Also, getting the community involved could be even more beneficial. Finding permanent places to host soup kitchens would benefit those in need. Also another solution would be donating money to restaurants and them giving free meals to those in need.
