If you could live your life fighting one cause, what would it be?

If I could live my life fighting one cause it would have to be fighting homelessness. I choose homelessness because it shows you a different side of life and it would teach me to be grateful for all things. Understanding I could be in the same position because of one choice or unfortunate circumstances, but because of grace this is not the case. Another reason I chose homelessness because I think being homeless teaches you how to be resilient. Not knowing where I would be sleeping, the next time I would be eating, and not being able to care for myself properly teaches you how to be resilient. Learning how to deal with uncertainty seems to be another hurdle most homeless people encounter. For example, you may not know where you will be sleeping but if you make the best of it. I know for a fact that being homeless is not safe at all and you must learn how survive through it all which is toughest part. Hope plays a big part into being homeless without hope that everything will get better, everything that you go through would essentially be for nothing. If all homeless people stick together, I'm positive change can be made.
